Animals can't use words to talk, but they can communicate.

Lots of animals communicate through sound. Frogs croak to tell each other whether they are male or female. ⒶDolphins and whales whistle to communicate with each other under the sea.

Sound isn't the only way animals communicate. For example, skunks can spray a bad smelling liquid when they are in danger. ⒷMany kinds of bears rub against trees to leave their own smell on the trunk. Marking the trees is the bear's way of saying "I was here."

Color can send a message, too. Chameleons can change color by their moods. If a chameleon turned red, that means it wants to fight. ⒸSome poisonous frogs make their skin brighter as a sign to predators*.

Some animals use movement to send a message. ⒹHave you ever seen a dog, put its chest on the ground and wag its tail softly? It's telling you that it wants to play. ⒺThe smell of dogs' urine* is the most effective way of communicating. But, if a dog shows his teeth, it's telling you something else - "Back off."

Whether it's by sound, color, smell, or movement, animals have lots of ways to send a message.

*urine: 소변, 오줌
