Hawaiian Vacation

Quentin Gwynn

Quentin Gwynn is in Hawaii with friends. He is on vacation, and he is having a wonderful time.

One afternoon Quentin is standing on a high rock. He is looking at the ocean. He sees a boy in the water below. The boy is in trouble. He is far from the beach, and he can't swim. Quentin takes off his backpack and his shoes. Then he jumps into the water, swims to the boy, and pulls him to the beach.

The boy isn't breathing. Quentin gives him CPR, and the boy begins to breathe again. Later, an ambulance comes. Paramedics check the boy. "He is fine," the paramedics tell Quentin. "You saved his life."

Quentin walks back to the high rock. His shoes are there, but his backpack is gone. Quentin's credit cards, his camera, and his money were in the backpack. "Well," Quentin thinks, "this is the end of my vacation."

Quentin's story is in the newspaper. People read about Quentin and the boy. They also read about Quentin's backpack.

A hotel owner tells Quentin, "Your room here is free." Restaurant owners tell Quentin, "Your meals here are free." A lot of people give Quentin money. "Here's money for a new camera," the people say. "Buy some other things, too. Have fun in Hawaii."

So it is not the end of Quentin's vacation. He stays in Hawaii an extra week. He has a wonderful time.
